

Regentsmead win best development lender of the year.

The Bridging and Commercial Awards 2010 finally took place. After weeks of the Bridging & Commercial team rushing around masquerading as event organisers, we reaped the rewards in blistering sunshine and, thankfully, England won that all important game.

Pretty much the 'who's who' of bridging and commercial finance was there. Arriving around midday, guests walked the red carpet to be greeted by a bevy of models who mingled between the crowds, adding an even more glamorous feel to the event. Held within the grounds of the Medieval Roman city wall, which extends from the Tower of London, the Champagne reception kicked off events perfectly before the crowd was ushered upstairs into the main room. Here 23 tables of ten, immaculately prepared, were laid out for the guests who buzzed around, spotting friends and colleagues as the atmosphere grew increasingly charged. But they didn't wait too long as taking the stage, Mo Mulki, publisher of Bridging and Commercial, began proceedings.

There were thirteen awards given out for various sectors of the finance industry and the winner of the Best Development Lender of the year was Regentsmead, the privately owned North London based property and finance group.

James Bloom, Regentsmead's CEO commented "We were delighted to win the Best Development Lender of the year at the Bridging & Commercial awards.

We are very pleased that our broker partners have recognised the high levels of service we strive to provide. We will continue to look at ways of improving our product and service to hopefully ensure we are worthy of the award in 2011"

Louise Fernley, editor of Bridging and Commercial, said: "Our 2010 awards aimed to celebrate the lenders who have not only survived, but thrived over the last year. One of our new awards, for Best Development Lender, deservedly went to Regentsmead after a number of glowing reports from brokers, property developers and other professionals that had worked with them.

"It was an obvious choice for our panel, with everybody agreeing that a firm with an appetite to lend and high-quality service levels is what is sorely needed in the market right now. On behalf of all of us at Bridging & Commercial we'd like to say congratulations to all of the Regentsmead team – and fingers crossed for 2011!"
